Architectural Drawing of East View of Biltmore House

The Biltmore House, located in Asheville, North Carolina, is a stunning example of Gilded Age architecture and the largest privately-owned home in the United States. Designed by Richard Morris Hunt, a prominent architect of the 19th century, the East facade of the Biltmore House is particularly noteworthy for its grandeur and intricate detailing. Hunt's architectural drawings for this facade would have included precise measurements and a keen attention to the Châteauesque style, which is characterized by steeply pitched roofs, turrets, and ornamental stonework. These drawings are essential in understanding the meticulous planning and artistic vision that went into creating this American icon. The Biltmore House remains a testament to the opulence of the era and the skill of its creators, drawing countless visitors each year who come to admire its beauty and historical significance.
